Promoting the contribution of soils to climate mitigation and adaptation, sustainable agricultural production, and a sustainable environment

The agroecological transition can be considered as a highly potential opportunity to respond to changes and challenges posed by climate change across the European continent. Agroecology is a holistic approach that relies on and maximizes the use of ecological processes to support agricultural production. Agroecological systems are characterized by higher biodiversity at all levels (intra- and interspecies, cropping and farming systems, landscapes and non-agricultural elements) than traditional highly intense agricultural systems. Such agroecological systems are potentially better adapted to local environmental conditions and to social and economic requirements. Transition of intensive agricultural systems to agroecological systems leads to more sustainable and climate responsive agricultural production. Such a transition is a relevant contribution to the implementation and success of the EU Green Deal and EU policies on biodiversity, on circular economy and on climate change. A transition towards agroecological systems fits the recommendations from the EU Mission A Soil Deal for Europe and the Farm to Fork Strategy and will contribute to reach the target “25% of agricultural land under organic farming”.

Challenging agroecological systems for such purposes needs to progress in two directions. First, getting and gathering new knowledge on the contribution of soils to the overall systems, hence focusing on biophysical aspects, is required to promote the transition of cropping systems towards a more resilient, sober, sustainable and healthy food production. Second, the adoption of sustainable production systems should be encouraged through a combination of strategies where national and local goals are aligned. This requires tailored public policies at the EU and Member State level, connecting to local conditions and acknowledging farmers' needs. Understanding factors that motivate farmers to adopt more sustainable practices is vital for a robust agricultural system transition. Two topics have therefore been proposed.

CA4/SP3-2 – Fostering the adoption of agroecological systems for climate mitigation and adaptation and sustainable agricultural production

Rationale:

The adoption of agroecological approaches is currently relatively limited to pioneering farmers and farmer associations. One explanation is that, contrary to practices, which are currently being stimulated through the CAP, adoption of sustainable agroecological systems is until now, not promoted by specific policies at the EU level. Furthermore, the measures promoted are often ineffective due to overly complex patterns of targeting measures and instruments, making it difficult for national policies to match local priorities. Improving farmers's uptake of agroecological practices calls for specific support measures and for the design of specific business cases at the farm and landscape level.

Understanding factors that motivate farmers to adopt more sustainable practices is vital for a robust agricultural system transition and for the implementation of agroecological systems. There is a need to move beyond the biophysical and socio-economic context, and also look at the aspirations and ambitions of the farmer with a focus on soil.

Scope: This project will utilize and build upon the knowledge and data provided by ongoing and completed FP7/H2020 projects looking at the adoption of sustainable measures, farmer's behaviour and risk perception. Focusing on soils, it will be complementary to future projects under HORIZON-CL6-2021-CLIMATE-01 will consider a wide range of crop and farming agroecological systems.

Farmer's behaviour and risk perception are at the core of this assignment. Farmers do not work in isolation, but are linked in the food system to various institutions and actors. The project should include a stakeholder analysis (powers) and their roles and responsibilities in relation to the adoption of measures and system transition. The project should consider the farmers and their relation with the other actors: policymakers, value chain actors, farmer associations and cooperatives, research and financial institutions as part of the context and adoption process.

Farmers differ in their perception of risk and opportunities related to soil management, even when operating in similar contexts. Triggering behavioural change and reaching out to farmers must account for these perceptions. This should also enable to identify incentives that resonate with farmer groups or types.

The insights should be used to improve extension services which are tailored to farmers, to understand how inter- and intra-farm cooperation and experimentation works for different farmer types and help foster efficient one; to design communication strategies adapted to the type of farmer, region and value chain. Project outputs should feed into the future EU Partnership on agroecology.

Expected outcomes:

- Quantitative and qualitative data and information on the drivers and barriers for the adoption of soil management practices that enable climate-smart sustainable soil management.

Expected impacts:

- EJP SOIL EI5: Fostering adoption of sustainable and agroecological farming systems conducive to climate change adaptation and mitigation.

Project Type: Medium size research project (up to 1.75 M€).
